First and foremost I want to thank James Stirling, the Director of the Institute for Particle Physics Phenomenology, for hosting this Conference in Durham. This provided an ideal venue for the meeting, and very much helped in the general ambiance both for the sessions and perhaps even more importantly for the informal discussions. The smooth running of the meeting was due to the unstinting efforts and excellent organisational skills of Mike Whalley and Linda Wilkinson, the other members of the Local Organisation Committee. The financial and administrative support from the IPPP is very gratefully acknowledged.

The Organising Committee consisted of Roger Barlow, Bob Cousins, Glen Cowan, Fred James, Jim Linnemann, Dean Karlen, Bill Murray, Harrison Prosper, Pekka Sinervo and James Stirling. I am most grateful to each and every one of them for their advice in the planning of the meeting, and also for their help in reading the contributions to these Proceedings.

The Chairmen of the Conference sessions were very efficient in keeping the sessions running smoothly, while not imposing limits in a way that would interfere with coverage. We are all grateful to all the speakers for their presentations, and (in the most part) for speedily providing the write-ups of their talks for these Proceedings.

I very much want to acknowledge the most efficient way in which Mike Whalley has single-handedly turned the varied contributions into the beautiful Proceedings. The costs of producing the Proceedings has generously been borne by the IPPP.

The Conference was distinctly enhanced by the presence of our two statisticians, Michael Goldstein and Wolfgang Rolke. We really appreciated their presence at all the sessions, and their valuable comments. We look forward to more participation from statisticians at future meetings.

Last but certainly not least, a big thank you to all the participants for helping to make the Durham Conference lively and memorable.
